

Mike has spent his career in venture capital across investing, starting companies, and fundraising. He co-founded Sutter Post Advisors, where he advised and raised capital for private funds and companies, primarily in healthcare and technology, as well as real estate opportunities. Mike held a number of roles with Bay City Capital, a healthcare-focused venture capital firm. Most recently as a Vice President, he sourced and evaluated investment opportunities and supported portfolio companies across several funds. Mike also co-founded Nevro (NYSE:NVRO), a medical device company, where he was responsible for strategy, finance, and operations and also actively involved in fundraising; the company went public in 2014. Mike received an MBA from INSEAD and an AB with honors from Harvard University, majoring in Economics.