Kenneth Lee is an assistant professor at the University of Chicago Medical Center. He graduated from a neurology residency at the University of Chicago in 2012, followed by a neurophysiology also at the University of Chicago. he then completed his sleep medicine fellowship at Northwestern University. After training, he was affiliated of MacNeal hospital in Berwyn IL winning teaching awards from the internal medicine residency and leading the stroke team as stroke director. In 2018 he rejoined the University of Chicago, where he became the associate program director for the neurology residency in 2018, followed by the neurology residency program director in 2020. Starting in 2022, he became the clinical medical director of the U. Chicago Sleep Center and has continued this role. He has continued to foster mentorship in both residency as well as fellows and has been recognized by the institution for his mentorship and educational initiatives.